Conclusion

- ▶ Concurrent jurisdiction over matters of competition and economic regulation has been effective over the years.
- ▶ However in some instances the economic regulation has not yet attempted to review the broadcasting market which dominant by the incumbent (MultiChoice).
- ▶ In South Africa, especially in the Telecoms sector there has been market barriers for new entrants. The market is dominated by firms such as Vodacom and MTN while on the other hand Telkom and Cell C are still struggling to enter the market.
- ▶ Regulation of Competition and economic regulation continues to be relevant; but also requires improvement over time.

Big data bringing competition policy to the digital era. Competition policy in the digital era.

The Superclusters Initiative: An Opportunity to Reinforce Innovation Ecosystems By Catherine Beaudry and Laurence Solar-Pelletier October 8, 2020 Hauser l'âge d'admissibilité aux prestations du Régime de rentes du Québec ? By Pierre-Carl Michaud, Yann Décarie, Franca Glenzer, François Laliberté-Auger and Stefan Staubli August 25, 2020 ABSTRACT Although the EU competition regime is well-established and highly effective, EU policy actors may still need to rethink their tried and tested approach to competition regulation. This is what happened in the context of the European Commission's planned regulation of online platforms, embodied (in part) within the Digital Markets Act. This article reviews the interplay of the EU's competition regime with its relatively new Digital Single Market strategy to ask how a traditional ex-post approach to competition regulation came to be supplemented by a (proposed) ex-ante regulatory approach. Informed by the literature on policy change, the article examines the policy context, the
